A FIFTY YEAR VISION FOR THE FUTURE – FUTURE GLASGOW 2011 – 2061
SUMMARY OF FULL CONSULTATION REPORT
Statement of commitment
Glasgow’s character has been shaped by the city’s past. From its origins as a religious and university town in the remote north-west of Europe, Glasgow successfully took a world-leading role in the growth of transatlantic trade with the Americas, global trade in cotton and chemicals, innovation in science and technology and the production of iron and steel. This continued through to shipbuilding and locomotives, and regeneration through culture. Characterised by one author as “the city that refused to die”, Glasgow has a long history of reinventing itself.

Written off as a lost cause less than 50 years ago, a new Glasgow has emerged – building on the best of the past and positioning itself for the future. Substantial investment has been ploughed into business, social and educational infrastructure. New sources of employment have emerged, new jobs have been created. And there has been a remarkable change in the look and feel of the city centre, in particular.

Glasgow has been ‘Miles Better’, the ‘European City Of Culture’, ‘The Friendly City’ and the ‘UK City of Architecture and Design’. It is now ‘Scotland with Style’ - and will soon host the 2014 Commonwealth Games.

The Glasgow of 2011 has transformed a great deal since 1961. But we still face huge challenges – poor health, poverty, unemployment and many social issues including drink, drugs and sectarianism. The city must become more resilient to reduce the harm caused by the deindustrialisation of the 1970s and 1980s, and to be in a better position to respond to future, as yet unanticipated, transformations. These issues must all be addressed if the Glasgow of 2061 is to be a city of opportunity for all of its citizens. We must challenge ourselves to pioneer new ways to regenerate this wonderful city, and once again be a leader in city renewal and reinvention.

Beneath all those things, Glasgow’s true character lies in the strength of its people. Warm, welcoming, resilient and adaptable, they are fiercely proud of their city. And they are our city’s greatest strength.

Future Glasgow will start the next chapter of the city’s evolution by building on Glasgow’s greatest assets. These include the creativity and pride of our citizens, our world class arts, cultural and education institutions, the heritage of the city centre and our many neighbourhoods, and the diversity of our private and social enterprise.

For the immediate future, the public, private and voluntary sectors all face severe funding constraints. But difficult times provide the motivation and drive for Glasgow to start looking much further ahead – and to be courageous. This city vision does exactly that. And it starts with the aspirations expressed by the citizens for the kind of city they want Glasgow to be.

If we can begin to see the future we would like for our city and ourselves, we can actively begin to plan for it. That is why this vision is so important. And, given the challenges facing our city, I believe it must be a priority.

That’s why I am fully committed to Future Glasgow – the People’s City.
Future Glasgow is a vision of what we the council, our partners, stakeholders and the people of Glasgow would like the city to be like in 2061, 50 years from now. And, how we will make this vision a reality.

It's a vision of a leading European city where our citizens’ creativity, enterprise and cultures will flourish. Everyone will have the chance to enjoy an active, healthy and fulfilling life. And neighbourhoods will be rid of the problems caused by the industrial decline during the twentieth century.

Above all, it’s Glasgow’s statement about how the people of Glasgow, the government and businesses will work together to make this vision a reality – for the greater good of the city that we love.
This city vision is a statement of values about the kind of city Glasgow aspires to be. It provides a long term plan to guide strategy, policy, investment and action for years to come. Not just by the council, but every citizen, community group, public organisation, business, social enterprise and government body which plays a part in Glasgow’s future.

The council has produced a draft vision based on the hopes and desires of Glasgow’s citizens. This document is a summary of that draft vision. The full version is available online at www.glasgowcityvision.com or from the Future Glasgow team, whose contact details are on the last page.

During the last year, the council asked over 2,700 people what they want Glasgow to be like in 2061. We’ve been to youth groups, multi-cultural festivals, focus groups, community events, seminars and schools. We’ve talked to people from all ages, backgrounds and areas across the city. We’ve asked politicians from across the political parties, and experts in education, business, environment, transport, culture, housing and other specialist fields.

They told us two main things:

• Future Glasgow must focus on improving the quality of life for everybody in the city, and

• Our citizens and institutions must work together better and in radically different ways to make this happen.

You will get a flavour of what those 2,700 people told us as you read the full version of the City Vision, because it’s based entirely on their aspirations for Glasgow in 2061.

What is a city vision?

“[I hope in 2061] Recycling is normal practice. Eco-housing is for everyone. Public transport is great. The city is clean. There are good jobs and this is a place where people want to stay.”
The 2,700 people who helped us to produce the draft vision also told us that Glasgow in 2061 should be a city which celebrates and nurtures our biggest asset: its people.

The messages that came back from the public engagement programme included demands for:

- Vibrant, safer and more tolerant neighbourhoods
- A more accessible city centre and productive River Clyde
- Healthier and greener lives
- Better transport and communication links
- Freedom to realise our creative potential
- A more thriving, enterprising and active city

These points are the basic elements of the draft City Vision. They are explored in more detail in the full version of the City Vision.

“I hope in 2061] Art and culture is on the up with more festivals and exhibitions.”

How Glasgow could be in 2061
“[I hope in 2061] we create high self esteem and pride among people, especially youth; from these come the innovation and enterprise that creates wealth in the city.”

Self-esteem, especially among young women is higher in Glasgow, particularly in the East End.”
Turning this vision into reality is a huge task. It will involve a massive change in the way we govern ourselves, the way citizens and institutions treat each other, the way we work together, and the way we learn and educate ourselves. We must also remember this is a vision for our city in 50 years time. These changes will not be completed within five years and maybe not even within 10 years. But we must start now to develop a plan with gradual goals that will provide clear direction, governance and delivery of the vision.

Core values

We believe that making the vision a reality needs to be based on some core values.

Creative and enterprising

We want Glasgow to be a place where everyone, especially young people, can realise their potential in culture, creative activity, work, education, sport, or wherever it may lie.

Creativity, teamwork and enterprise will be encouraged and promoted everywhere – in neighbourhoods, in business, in education, and across the public, private and voluntary sectors.

Opportunities for everyone

There will be opportunities for all of us, wherever our abilities lie and whatever our background. No-one should be left behind for lack of opportunity. Glasgow will be a fairer and safer place to live.

Teamwork

Glasgow will also be a place where everyone will work together to achieve our goals. The city’s neighbourhoods will have re-emerged as places where people can enjoy healthier and more rewarding lives. Intolerance and sectarianism will have been banished. And the way that the city is run will have been changed radically: business and communities will be more equal partners with the Council and public institutions, and Glasgow as a whole will have more powers to govern itself. This will need strong mutual respect and tolerance at every level – amongst citizens, between the city’s institutions and its citizens, and with national and international institutions.

Creativity and enterprise, opportunity and fairness, teamwork and respect

We have a heritage of these values in Glasgow. These values helped to make this city a great place, a city of which Glaswegians are famously proud.

“[I hope in 2061] We anaesthetise junkies. Ban orange walks. Have a half decent bus service.”

“[I hope in 2061] We educate people to take pride in themselves, homes and local communities.”

“[I hope in 2061] We take our pride in our people into areas we’re less good at – health, litter, drinking, communities. We should be an example of how to build a true sense of community to the rest of the world, and boast about it. Need to work locally, with joint resources, building community solutions.”
“[I hope in 2061] We support communities to develop sustainable local environments that have the power to create local jobs, grow food, local energy generation, positive health and well-being.”

“I may be homeless, but I’m not hopeless.”

“We make the Clyde the centre of Glasgow - develop the banks and the Southside.”
“[I hope in 2061] We educate people to take pride in themselves, homes and local communities.”

“I hope in 2061] We have integrated transport system across the city and make it affordable.”

Before we start to turn this vision into reality, we need you to tell us if we’re going in the right direction. To help you tell us what you think about this vision, we have five questions which can be found at the end of the full version of the City Vision, available online at www.glasgowcityvision.com, or from the Future Glasgow team whose contact details are below. The full version also explains how we will take forward the city vision in the future.
